Shigeto and van Lier use a time-priming paradigm with 16 monolingual and bilingual adults. All participants were asked to read a list of words and to judge whether the words were related to a target word. The target word was "cat". The words were "cat", "dog", "bird", "fish", "insect", "mammal", "reptile", "amphibian", "mammal", "bird", "fish", "insect", "mammal", "reptile", "amphibian". The words were presented in a list, and participants were asked to judge whether the words were related to the target word. The results showed that bilingual participants were faster to judge the words as related to the target word than monolingual participants. This suggests that bilingual participants have a more efficient system for processing word relationships.
