

His earliest literary work, "The Story of the Little Red Riding Hood," was published in 1865. The book was a success, and it led to a series of other children's books. In 1867, he published "The Story of the Little Red Riding Hood," which was a sequel to the first book. The book was a success, and it led to a series of other children's books. In 1867, he published "The Story of the Little Red Riding Hood," which was a sequel to the first book. The book was a success, and it led to a series of other children's books.